

Other Scenarios

COMMUNITY-BASED LEARNING

- You are at your workplace. Your supervisor decides that you are ready to take on more responsibility. He/She has this project that he would like you to work on. It is complicated, and, as he./she begins to explain it, you are unclear about some of the details. You don't want to seem "thick" or incapable, but you also would like to make sure that you get the job done right.

- You've been working at a retail shop for a month or so, and you have a really good, friendly relationship with your mentor. During your shifts at the shop, begin to notice a co-worker who is behaving suspiciously when the supervisor is not around. One day, you see this person slip a $20 bill into his pocket from the cash register. What runs through your head? How could doing nothing become a problem for you? Should you mention something to your supervisor?

-